

NEWS FLASH – CREW WANTED

In July 2021, Monara left Belgium, and travelled along the coasts of Scotland, Faroe, Iceland, Greenland, Canada, USA, Cuba, Jamaica, Panama, Colombia, Costa Rica, El Salvador and Mexico. We are now sheltered in Chiapas Marina in South Mexico, near Tapachula, on the Pacific Coast, waiting for the hurricane season to pass.

The crew that made this all possible consisted of my wife Sylvie, our children, and some friends who came along for some crossings.

Now the kids have gone off, back to school, and Sylvie is recovering from a hernia operation while the captain is preparing the boat for our next adventures.

Over the next four months we will explore the West Coast of Mexico, known for its exotic cities like La Paz and Acapulco and excellent cruising grounds in the Sea of Cortez. We will come along great surf locations, exceptional diving spots, whale watching opportunities and fantastic anchorages. On top of that we will be able to enjoy the rich Mexican culture and excellent food in a warm climate, while winter is coming in Europe...

Fortunately we are looking for crew, so you could be part of our adventures.

If you have three or more weeks to spare, and if you are willing to adapt to Monara's schedule, we will gladly have you on board. Our intention is to share the cost of living and berthing, although the captain takes care of the fuel cost. You will be required to assist on board, to help in the cooking and to help keep the boat clean and shipshape, ready for travel. While sailing you will be asked to assist in the watches, and we'll gladly learn you all about navigation, boat maintenance and life onboard.
